

Cabinet Overlay Agreement

The overlay of a cabinet door describes the way in which the door fits onto the cabinet frame. Typically, there are two options: standard overlay and full overlay.

Full overlay is when there is only a minimal gap between cabinet door fronts so that you cannot see the cabinet boxes when doors and drawers are closed. Typically, there is 1/4" to 3/8" spacing between the doors. This option requires hardware and can be a bit more expensive. It gives a clean and contemporary look that some homeowners prefer.

With standard overlay, more of the cabinet frame is visible around the doors and drawers when they are closed. Typically there is a 1" to 1 1/2" space between closed doors. Standard overlay is an attractive option that can be used without hardware. It can also lower the overall cost of your cabinetry.

Please Note: Inset doors lay flush within the frame or box of the cabinet. The door lies in the cabinet opening so that the cabinet door and front edge of the cabinet are on the same plane.

I have read this description of the difference between Standard and Full Overlay. I have made my cabinet selections with full understanding of this difference. I hereby authorize Kitchen and Bath Creations to place an order with my chosen cabinet style and overlay.
